Commodities Commentary

Oil – ultimate overnight gains were attributed to potential Covid-19 vaccine news having boosted crude demand optimism.

In addition, the chair of a European Union leaders summit expressed confidence regarding nearer-term agreement on a proposed regional economic recovery support plan.

In the meantime, major international oil exporter Saudi Arabia's king was reported as being admitted to hospital.

The August WTI futures contract is due to expire on tonight's settlement.

Gold – reports of likely progress towards stimulus measures for the European Union and US helped support overnight gold trade, with regards to anticipated debt levels.

Silver notably settled at its most (for a most-active contract) in almost four years.

Base metals – the $US traded at six-week lows overnight, but this was not the only positive influence on trade sentiment.

Potential new near-term additional stimulus agreements for the US and Europe supported demand optimism.

China's one-year and five-year benchmark loan rates, announced yesterday, remained the same as they have since April, at 3.85% and 4.65% respectively.

Japan's June trade figures included an improvement in the trade deficit to ¥268.8B from ¥838.2B, but forecasters had anticipated a shortfall of just ¥40B. Exports dropped 26.2% year-on-year and imports by 14.4%.
