PRECIOUS METALS COMMENTARY

Gold and silver prices are posting strong gains in early-afternoon U.S. trading Thursday. Traders in both metals have stepped in to buy the dips on some perceived bargain hunting, and by heavy short covering from the futures traders. Also, precious metals are seeing good buying interest as the U.S. dollar index is posting sharp losses today, on a corrective pullback from recent gains that pushed the index to a 16-month high Wednesday. December gold futures were last up $20.80 an ounce at $1,235.60. December Comex silver was last up $0.458 at $14.74 an ounce.

The precious metals gained today despite upbeat trader and investor risk attitudes. Global stock markets were mostly higher today. U.S. stock indexes are higher in early- afternoon dealings, on an extension of a strong rebound from Monday's sell-off that drove the indexes to six-month lows. However, those thinking the world stock markets have seen the "all clear" siren as the calendar turns to November are likely going to be disappointed.

Focus in the U.S. is turning to next week's mid-term elections, which many believe will be a referendum on the performance of President Trump.

The other key outside market today sees December Nymex crude oil prices sharply weaker, hitting a 4.5-month low overnight and trading just above $63.00 a barrel. Recent technical damage on the charts suggests more downside for crude oil in the near term.

The key U.S. economic data point of the week, if not the month, will be Friday's November employment report from the Labour Department. The key non-farm payrolls number is forecast to come in at up 188,000. However, Wednesday's ADP national employment report reading of up 227,000 suggests Friday's jobs report could be stronger than forecast.
