PRECIOUS METALS COMMENTARY

Gold prices are trading modestly lower in early-afternoon U.S. trading Monday, on a mild corrective pullback after touching a nearly five-month high overnight. Some safe-haven demand has surfaced for gold recently as world stock and financial market traders are still very uneasy.

The key outside markets were in a bearish posture for the precious metals today. The U.S. dollar index was solidly higher, while Nymex crude oil prices were lower and trading just below $52.00.

Brexit turmoil and uncertainty regarding when and how the U.K. will depart the European Union have European stock and financial markets unsettled. Prime minister Theresa May today called off Tuesday's vote on her Brexit plan, which most reckoned would be voted down anyway. The Euro currency sunk and the U.S. dollar index rallied following May's announcement.

World stock markets were mostly lower today, including U.S. stock indexes. Wobbly U.S.-China trade talk prospects and new documents released late last week more strongly suggesting very high-level Trump presidential campaign staffers colluded with Russia have traders and investors uneasy to start the trading week.
